Since its establishment in 1967, the Anacostia Community Museum has been a cultural anchor in the community. Our new urban issues-focused mission expands the museum’s community-inclusive approach to museology, broadening our perspective and demonstrating that local issues resonate with urban communities wherever they are. It also requires that we provide wider access to our research and collections, and that we continue to engage our local constituents while attracting new audiences to our exhibitions and programs. Anacostia Community Museum continues to be a trailblazer in its approach to community engagement and in recognizing its role in preserving and showcasing those things that define community on many levels.
